Professor Jan Illing
The Royal College of Surgeons in Ireland

Jan Illing is Professor of Medical Education Research in the Royal College of Surgeons in Ireland. She moved with her research team from Durham University in July 2015. Jan has worked extensively in the field of medical education and has worked, in formally contracted arrangements with the General Medical Council (GMC), the Health Professions Council, The National Clinical Assessment Service, The Royal College of General Practitioners, the Medical Schools Council, the National Institute for Health Research and The Department of Health, as well as organisations within the North East of England, such as Health Education North East. Jan and her team have conducted research across a range of medical education themes including: medical transitions, professionalism, revalidation and workplace bullying in the NHS.

Dr. Charlotte Rothwell
Senior Research Associate, the Newcastle University

Charlotte Rothwell is a Senior Research Associate in the Newcastle University. During Charlotte's thirteen years in medical education she has worked on several large scale national projects for external organisations including the General Medical Council, the Nursing and Midwifery Council, the Health and Care Professions Council and the Royal College of General Practitioners. Several of these projects have had an impact on policy. Charlotte's interests include transitions made by doctors such as those moving from medical school into practice and overseas doctors entering UK practice. Charlotte's PhD which she gained at Durham University looked at enablers and barriers to doctors progressing through their medical training using a Constructivist Grounded Theory Approach.

秋田大学 衛生学・公衆衛生学講座では、2人の女性研究者を迎え、質的研究手法についてのレクチャーとワークショップを開催いたします。
